I. INTRODUCTION

The Rackliffe House, alternately known during the past two hundred years as the Dirickson farm, Sandy Point farm or Manor Place, is situated on an elevated ridge of land overlooking Sinepuxent Bay, Assateague Island, and the Atlantic Ocean. Owned by the State of Maryland and leased to the Rackliffe House Trust, the two-story, three-bay brick dwelling is the focus of an intensive restoration effort to return this important historic site to its original appearance, while at the same time sensitively adapting the site as a publicly accessible museum focused on interpreting over three hundred years of historical development in addition to its prehistoric past. In an effort to inform and guide the restoration of the house, the services of architectural historian Paul Baker Touart were retained for the research and production of a preservation plan. While this initial phase of work is primarily focused on detailing the architectural finishes of the exterior, it also contains a large amount of documentary research that is critical to the interpretation of the restoration. The information can also form the basis for additional historical research as time allows. Beginning in 2006-07, the restoration effort is planned over a three-year period.

II. HISTORICAL CONTEXT

Captain Charles Rackliffe (d. 1752) is credited with the construction of this impressive brick dwelling on land that descended in his family since 1678/9. In his lifetime, Charles Rackliffe held title to 1700 acres in Worcester County, most of which was located on Sinepuxent Neck. The 1745 Worcester County debt books list tracts Genesar, Goshen, Pleasant, and Husband's Torrent under his ownership. Charles Rackliffe's inventory, probated on December 15, 1752,¹ reveals that he had developed a large working plantation, raising market supplies of tobacco, corn and wheat. At the same time he merchandised local timber products, such as shingles and cypress boards. He held sizable numbers of livestock and processed animal skins into marketable leather. (According to the inventory three of Rackliffe's cows were grazing on the barrier island.) Also included in the Rackliffe inventory were large varieties of fabric as well as five dozen brass buttons, which points to Captain Charles Rackliffe's position in the region as a merchant as well as a planter. Clearly he had on hand imported fabrics and other items that he offered to neighbors, often in exchange for tobacco, cypress shingles, or other crops and local manufactures. Represented also in his inventory is an assortment of walnut and maple furniture, most likely locally produced. Especially appropriate for this large house are over ten beds, the most expensive of which was a tall poster bed with mattress and hung with calico curtains valued at L6, making it the single most expensive furniture item in the house. Approximately half of Charles Rackliffe's moveable estate was invested in seventeen African-American slaves valued at L538.

The Rackliffe plantation remained in family hands through the balance of the eighteenth century and into the early nineteenth century. Captain Charles Rackliffe left a third of his estate to his wife Rachel during the rest of her life, and after her death her share was intended to pass to their children. To his eldest son, John, he left a part of all my land and Plantation whereon I now dwell lying and being in the County aforesaid on the Eastermost side of Sinepuxon neck according to the metes and bounds hereafter mentioned, Beginning at a Mulberry post artificially set upon the Bay side or Sound of Water and from thence North west into the Woods until it runs to ye Divisional line of marked trees or midell of the said Neck that divides between Maj[or] John Purnales Land and mine and from thence South West fifty fore degrees Westerly to the South side of a small Swamp called the school house swamp and from thence in the sd swamp Easterly & down the dreane of the sd swamp to the head of a small Creek that divides between myself and Joh (sic) Purnall then down the sd small Creek to the mouth thereof Easterly round the sd point Easterly to the Bay side and thence up the Bay Northerly to ye sd Mulberry post aforementioned...²

John Rackliffe's inheritance included the main plantation dwelling, called Manor Place in later land records. This name was surely developed by the Rackliffes to distinguish their longtime ownership of the lands dating back to the original 1678/9 patent, and to distinguish their plantation from the other part of the Genesar tract that had passed to John Purnall through his marriage to Elizabeth Rackliffe. It is also clear from the entailments in Charles Rackliffe's will that he intended on establishing a landed estate in English fashion that was to pass down through family hands, thereby protecting the family's legacy on Sinepuxent Neck.

John Rackliffe owned this part of the family plantation during third quarter of the eighteenth century and throughout the Revolutionary War years. He is designated in the 1783 Federal tax assessment as the owner of more than 1,800 acres on Sinepuxent and Newport necks. The evaluation of his lands totaled a remarkable L3818.5.0. John Rackliffe participated in the Atlantic trade like his father; at his death he owned half interest in the hull of a vessel "on the stocks at John Fassitts" valued at L75. John Rackliffe succeeded in the agricultural and timber trade of the second half of the eighteenth century, and like his parents before him, owned a range of livestock and raised market supplies of tobacco, corn and wheat. Fifteen slaves worked Manor Place and the other tenant farms he held on Sinepuxent and Newport necks. The Manor Place dwelling was furnished with a wider range of fine furniture and objects than owned by his parents, a general pattern of conspicuous consumption by the Chesapeake gentry that follows through the mid to late eighteenth century. His inventory included many fine mahogany dining and tea tables, a mahogany desk and tall case clock, and six "beds, bedsteads and furniture."³

John Rackliffe wrote a lengthy will in 1788, and at his death two years later the will was recorded in the Worcester County courthouse. The entailed lands he inherited from his father were passed in large part to his son, John, with lesser bequests to his daughters, Sally Fassitt, wife of Rouse Fassitt, and Catherine White, wife of William White and grandchildren, Thomas and Ziporha Fassitt and Sally White.⁴ To his son John, he wrote in his will

I give and bequeath unto my son John Rackliff to him his heirs and Assigns forever the following tracts or parcels of Land one tract of Land called Janezeer containing five hundred acres an other tract of Land called Goshen and Mayfield containing one hundred and seventy acres one other tract of Land called Pleasant containing one hundred and twenty Acres and a tract of Land called Rackliff's Good Luck beginning at the first bounder as the course directs to the side of a Creek called Point creek which lies between John Purnell and my self and binding on the Eastermost side of said Creek to the mouth thereof and then Rownd as the Bay directs to the first bounder another small tract lying on the Bayside at a point commonly known by the name Sandy Point...

The third John Rackliffe's ownership of the family plantation was short-lived⁵; he predeceased his wife Sarah, who, after her death in November 1801, left four minor children—John, Rider, Kitturah, and Charlotte Rackliffe—heirs to a huge estate. Sarah Rackliffe left each child a lot in Square 165 of the new city of Washington, in addition to the family plantations on Sinepuxent and Newport necks. The latter were evaluated by the Orphans' Court of Worcester County.

The officials appointed by the court, Thomas N. Williams and William McGrigor, evaluated all the land holdings of the four orphans. Their detailed list of improvements, written in October 1808, included "One two story brick dwelling house, 36' x 30', One brick kitchen much out of repair, 30' x 20', two old frame kitchens very little value, One brick milk house in good repair," along with other log and frame farm buildings and tenant houses. At the time the main Manor Place dwelling was leased and occupied by a tenant, Kirk Gunby.⁶ Due to the young age of the Rackliffe children, they did not occupy the Manor Place plantation while it was under tenancy.

John H. Rackliffe of Somerset County, the eldest of the four children, surfaces in August 1813 as the grantor of the Manor Place plantation. For the sum of $14,500, he conveyed 729 acres of the Sinepuxent plantation to Thomas Fassitt, then a resident of Philadelphia.⁷ Given the description of the improvements in 1808, the attached colonnade and kitchen were built during Thomas Fassitt's period of ownership. The mixture of reused eighteenth-century brick and early nineteenth century brick along with the V-shaped mortar joints supports this dating of the service wing. Attached kitchens by way of a colonnade also provided a means to separate the working and sleeping domain of the house slaves from the plantation family. Thomas Fassitt owned the Rackliffe plantation for six years, and conveyed 612 ½ acres of the land he purchased to John and Mary Hooper in August 1819.⁸ The plantation was passed back and forth between the Hoopers and Fassitts until 1835 when the property, consisting of 1060 acres, was sold to John C. Dirickson for $14,000.⁹ During John C. Dirickson's period of ownership, which stretched between 1835 and 1862, the house and kitchen wing were stuccoed to imitate ashlar construction. The practice of stuccoing brick to appear like stone was very popular in and around Berlin. (See Burley Manor, 1835, and Caleb's Discovery, c. 1750 and c. 1820) Around 1850 John C. Dirickson gave over occupancy of the old Manor Place plantation house to his son James Brevard Dirickson, who is located at this site on the 1877 East Berlin district map in the Lake, Griffing, and Stevenson atlas. James Brevard Dirickson held title to this farm through the balance of the nineteenth century, and in 1902 the property passed to his stated heirs, Elizabeth Anne Dirickson Henry, Zadock P. Henry III, and Addie B. Henry.¹⁰ The fire that destroyed the interior and resulted in a rebuilding of the roof occurred in 1928 when the Sinepuxent Corporation held a mortgage on the Henry land holdings, which at the time encompassed over 2000 acres. During the second half of the twentieth century the property was known as the Woodcock farm. In 1995 Thomas Ruark purchased the "residue of the Dirickson farm" from the estate of Elizabeth P. Woodcock.¹¹ A year later the State of Maryland acquired 114.8 acres and the old Rackliffe House.¹²

⁶ Kirk Gunby also figures in a deed between himself and Charlotte Rackliffe and William Winder, guardian, Worcester County Land Record, X/532, 2 January 1806 for the acquisition of six slaves.

III. ARCHITECTURAL CONTEXT

The Rackliffe House at Manor Place is a large two-story, three-bay, double pile brick dwelling built during the second quarter of the eighteenth century by Captain Charles Rackliffe. Probably dating from the mid to late 1740s, the four-room plan brick structure was clearly standing by the time of Charles Rackliffe's death in 1752. (See Plate 1, Rackliffe House, c. 1900) Sited on an prominent ridge, the house Charles Rackliffe financed was clearly intended to make the most of this location by raising it on an elevated site with a man-made terrace surrounding it. The inclusion of large windows on the north, south and east walls provided expansive views up and down Sinepuxent bay and across to the Atlantic Ocean. Monitoring the shipping traffic in and out of Sinepuxent Inlet (See Plate 2, John Churchman, Jr., Map of the Peninsula Between the Delaware and Chesapeake Bays, 1778 ?) was of great interest given Charles Rackliffe's position as a planter and a merchant.

The two-story brick house was built in characteristic Flemish bond with random glazed headers featured throughout the four elevations. While the Flemish bond is not highlighted in characteristic fashion with a regular checkerboard pattern of glazed headers, there was an obvious effort to use the glazed headers for their decorative intent. The base of the structure is defined by a plain, single ledge watertable, and the east and west walls are pierced by rectangular vents that are similar to the foundation venting at St. Martin's Church (1756-63). Although the house was gutted by fire around 1928, the original form of the steeply pitched gable roof is evident in a turn of the twentieth century image of the property. The steeply pitched gable roof had kicked eaves, an architectural feature common to nearby Genesar (c. 1730-40), All Hallows Church (1748-56) and St. Martin's Church (1756-63). Nine-over-nine sash windows lighted the first floor, and nine-over-six illuminated the second floor rooms. Unusual to this house were large sized twelve-over-eight sash windows that pierced the gable ends to light the attic. On the east wall above the center entrance is a large nine-over-nine stairwell window. While seemingly intrusive in the east elevation with its large size in comparison to the window openings to each side, this type of stairwell window has regional precedents at Almodington in Somerset County and Tower Hill in Northampton County, Virginia.

Evident in the size and finish of the exterior, the Rackliffe House was one of the most impressive gentry dwellings in the region during the second quarter of the eighteenth century. Through the analysis of the exterior fabric and the information provided by the early twentieth century image, the exterior can be restored faithfully to its mid eighteenth appearance. The recent stripping of the 1830s stucco has revealed several things about the finish of the original house. Beltcourses between the first and second stories, a characteristic feature of Georgian style dwellings, were chopped off to provide a smooth surface. The ends of shutter pintels are imbedded in the brickwork to each side of the window openings, indicating the early presence of shutters on the house. Putlog holes in the four elevations of Flemish bond brickwork, used for anchoring supportive horizontal timber scaffolding during construction, were bricked in at a much later date due to the different mortar used to secure the header sized pieces. The mid eighteenth-century Palmer House in Williamsburg is one of the best examples of this construction feature in the Chesapeake region. (See Plate 3, Palmer House, Legacy of the Past, Colonial Williamsburg)

Although undocumented by historic images or descriptions, the interior spaces of this large scale house were surely finished with a high level of mid eighteenth-century woodwork. A second phase of documentary research and drawings is targeted at detailing the interior rooms. In keeping with general practices, the woodwork finishes were executed in a hierarchical order with the most elaborate moldings and raised-panel craftsmanship on the first floor and less elaborate moldings on the second floor. While important to the function of the house with its large scale twelve-over-eight sash gable end windows on the third floor, the attic would have been finished in a more rudimentary fashion with board partitions and plastered walls and ceilings.

In 1813, John H. Rackliffe sold Manor Place to Thomas Fassitt for $14,500.¹³ It was likely that after this transfer the attached service wing was built against the north gable end of the mid eighteenth century house. Designed in a familiar format for the time, the service wing included a single-story, one-room plan, gable roofed kitchen and adjacent colonnade. The two structures with differing rooflines were built together with a mixture of reused eighteenth and early nineteenth-century bricks. The mortar joints are struck in a V-shaped joint common to the early nineteenth century. Although the original roofs to the kitchen and hyphen have been replaced, the roof pitches are evident in the c. 1900 documentary image and architectural fabric. The original kitchen for the mid eighteenth-century house was located in a separate brick structure that is identified in the 1808 Orphan's Court description of the Rackliffe plantation. The 30' by 20' size of the kitchen, which was "much out of repair," in 1808 points to a much older dwelling sized structure that was probably converted into a kitchen after the two-story dwelling was built. The brick from the deteriorated "kitchen" was probably salvaged for the construction of the attached service wing. The size and finish of the exterior windows and door will be characteristic of the early nineteenth century.

The size and construction of the extant brick milk house suggests that it was built of reused materials during the period around 1800. The 1808 description calling it in "good repair" suggests that it was relatively new at the time. More attention to this building will be part of additional work in this first phase of the preservation plan.

10.26.1808 Estate of John Rackliffe; In the care of James Laird, View & Estimate

Worcester County.....The State of Maryland to Thomas N. Williams & William McGrigor Esquire, Greeting, The Orphans Court of Worcester County....have constituted and appointed you Commissioners to view and value the estate of John Rackliffe, minor, in the care of James Laird his Guardian and do hereby authorize and empower you after shall have taken the annexed oath to examine the real estate of the said John Rackliffe and to estimate the annual value thereof, including any slaves, working beasts, stock, and utensils thereon belonging the orphan... You are also to set down in writing what dwelling houses, out houses, orchards, gardens, meadows, and courses, and other improvements are on the land and the condition thereof and what proportion of the said land is in your estimation in woods...

And you are hereby required to make a fair and distinct action of your proceedings under this appointment under your hands and Seals to the said Court on or before the second Tuesday of October next annexed to this commission

Witness: Littleton Robins, Sr. Esquire, Chief Justice of the October Court 1808.

In Pursuance of the annexed Commission Issued out of the Orphans Court of Worcester County directed to us the Subscribers to view and estimate the annual value of the estate of John Rackliffe minor in the care of the Rev'd James Laird, his Guardian as will appear by the said Commission, we do hereby certify that after we had taken the oath required, we proceeded to view the lands and negroes belonging to said John Rackliffe minor. We do make the following report and valuation viz. that we do estimate the annual value of the land belonging to said John Rackliffe which is now leased to Kirk Gunby and entailed on said John Rackliffe and lying on the south west side of line drawn North West from a Mulberry post standing on the bay side eastward from the dwelling house where said Gunby lives in Synepuxon neck, at One Hundred and ninety Dollars and there in on the said land sixteen hundred and seventy panels of fence with eight and nine rails to a panel, and about one hundred and seventy old decaying apple trees, and in our estimation about one fourth of said lands in woods, and not well timbered and there is on said land the following buildings...

	length	breadth
One two story brick dwelling house	36 feet	33
One brick kitchen much out of repair	30	20
Two old frame kitchens of very little value each	20	15
One hewed log dwelling house of little value	20	15
One sawed log smoke house	15	12
One old ditto of no value	12 ½	12 ½

One new ditto ditto in good repair	12	12
One old hen house of no value	10	10
Two sawed log corn cribs in bad repair each	19 ½	7

A passage between said cribs with plank floor in bad order 19 ½ 15

And there is in our estimation about one fifth of said lands in woods which land we do estimate at the annual value of Three hundred and thirty dollars, one fourth belongs to said John Rackliffe, which is Eighty two dollars and fifty cents, and there is belonging to said John Rackliffe the following Negroes, value as follows:

		Profit	Expense
One Negro man named Draper aged 62 years		=	=
One ditto ditto Abraham	24	40
One ditto boy Levin	14	24
One ditto Ditto Milby	11	9
One ditto man Will	22	40
One ditto woman Esther	57	=	14
One ditto ditto Nancy	59	=	16
One ditto ditto Sarah	19	12	=
One ditto girl Esther	10	=	=

Which will make the whole annual value of said John Rackliffes Lands, slaves and stock the sum of Three hundred and ninety seven dollars and fifty cents current money...And we do allow one third of the land in Synepuxon to be planted in Indian corn, and one third sowed in small grain annually, and the one half of the lands in Newport to be planted in Indian corn, and one half sowed in small grain annually—Witness our hands and seals this 26th day of Oct.
